

How do I request the assistance of a nurse advisor?

To request the assistance of a nurse advisor, you should:

- Indicate on the WorkSafeBC reporting form that you wish to consult with the nurse advisor
- Call the WorkSafeBC claim officer, who can connect you to the assigned nurse advisor
- Call the number listed in the contact information for your location and ask to speak to a nurse advisor

Are you a health care provider?

Billing fee codes are available for phone consultations with nurse advisors for the purpose of recovery/return-to-work planning.

Contact information

Visit our web site at WorkSafeBC.com for more information.

RETURN TO WORK IS GOOD FOR RECOVERY

THE NURSE ADVISOR'S ROLE IN RETURN-TO-WORK PLANNING

WORK SAFE BC

WORKING TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE

A changing approach to return to work

Return-to-work programs are based on the philosophy that many injured workers can safely perform productive work during their recovery period — and doing so provides emotional and physical benefits which can help the recovery process.

WorkSafeBC (the Workers' Compensation Board) is here to assist with returning to work safely and effectively. Here's what you need to know about WorkSafeBC nurse advisors and how they can help injured workers safely return to work and recover from injury or illness.

What is a nurse advisor?

A nurse advisor is a registered nurse with additional training and education focused on recovery and return-to-work planning. The nurse advisor provides a clinical perspective that is separate from claim entitlement issues and consistent with the professional standards for registered nurses and nurse practitioners.

How can a nurse advisor help with recovery and return-to-work planning?

A nurse advisor contributes by:

- Applying principles of disability management and evidence-based best practice guidelines to ensure a safe and timely return to work and promote the best possible recovery
- Collaborating with physicians, workers, employers, and treating therapists to develop individualized recovery and return-to-work plans
- Negotiating and coordinating safe and timely return-to-work plans
- Supporting and facilitating continuity of care and services throughout the recovery process

When should I contact a nurse advisor?

You should contact the nurse advisor when you:

- Require assistance in developing a recovery/return-to-work plan
- Need information about WorkSafeBC-sponsored rehabilitation programs and health care benefits
- Need more information about a worker's return-to-work options