Submission:

The reference to "experience in confined space entry" is subjective as what might constitute experience to one person may be totally inadequate.

When/how is the "combination of education, training and experience acceptable to the board" assessed?

Seems there might be potential to assess the viability of both of the above only after an incident actually occurs, which may be too late and very unforgiving.

I support the idea of a "qualified" person but, with the stakes at hand, feel uncomfortable with the subjectivity and lack of definitive requirements.
